METHODOLOGY:

This bill provides employment protections to the spouses of military service members who are involuntarily mobilized in support of war, national emergency, or contingency operations.

The Department of Labor indicates the bill would amend RSA 110:C by adding a new section relative to the employment rights and protections for spouses of military service members involuntarily mobilized. Stated protections include prohibition on discharge, refusal to hire, and adverse employment action based on involuntary mobilization and reemployment protections. The bill further authorizes filing of complaints for violations of the requirements with the Department of Labor, and obligates employers as liable for reinstatement, back pay and benefits lost due to violation if found. The proposed language further mandates the Department of Labor to adopt rules pursuant to RSA 541-A relative to complaint and hearing procedures for complaints alleging violation. The Department of Labor states it is unlikely that the bill would have a significant impact on revenues at the state, county or local level. It is possible there may be cost associated with reinstatement and back pay in instances where a public employer violates the stated requirements, but any such cost is difficult to quantify. In terms of state costs, the Department does not anticipate that the bill would materially impact the administration of complaints or associated hearings.

The Department of Administrative Services (DAS) understands that this bill would require the State, as an employer, to provide employment protections for state employees who are spouses of military service members involuntarily mobilized in support of war, national emergencies or contingency operations. The legislation also states that any leave of absence required for affected employees would be unpaid and no accruals or benefits would be paid during any leave taken under the stated circumstances. The Department assumes these requirements would apply to all executive branch employees, including those in classified, non-classified and unclassified positions.

The DAS states the fiscal impact of the proposed legislation is indeterminable. Once the affected employee(s) give notice to the employer of their spouse being involuntarily mobilized under the stated conditions, the affected employee would essentially receive a status of unpaid job protection, similar to that of FMLA. Since the legislation states that any leave of absence requested under the criteria of bill would be unpaid, without accruals or benefit continuation, there would be no direct cost to the state as an employer. The only financial impact that may apply is if an employee is wrongfully terminated, in violation of the bill, which would require the state as an employer to provide back pay and any loss of benefits and legal costs to the affected employee seeking reinstatement. Any such cost is indeterminable as the number of employees who may report a violation of this legislation, and the potential cost cannot be predicted.
